As a maritime Nation, we are challenged to maintain and enhance the economic benefits that a healthy and productive ocean provides. The declining health of ocean, coastal, and Great Lakes ecosystems threatens their ability to provide the products and services on which much of our economy depends. For example, marine and aquatic invasive species cost our economy billions of dollars each year in damage to fisheries, tourism, and coastal infrastructure. Another example indicates that coral bleaching has cost the United States an estimated $4.8 billion over the past 50 years, affecting tourism and fishing, and increasing the vulnerability of coastal areas to storm damage. The proliferation of marine debris along our coasts has significant economic impacts across a number of marine sectors, including tourism, recreation, and fisheries.
