Among the seven countries with the highest obesity rates, six of them are English-speaking countries according to the report from Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development (OECD). The USA is at the top of list, followed by Mexico, New Zealand, Australia, the United Kingdom, Canada, and Ireland. To the contrary, the ten slimmest countries are non-English speaking nations, such as Japan, Korea, and Italy. Therefore, health experts try to investigate why people from English-speaking countries are fatter than people from non-English speaking ones. Another interesting issue found by OECD is that poorly educated women are thirty percent more likely to be overweight than those who receive a better education. Education plays an important role in not only society but also obesity.
